After this conversation is over, the log with the kings will begin and the conversation will be inserted. Tell the kings about their successes. After considering what good has been done, the Kings will question why the ephores were named. Pausanias is a cultist. If Lagos was killed by a judge, the jury, the executioner, there would be enough evidence and the player would be expelled from Sparta - the guards would be hostile to Sparta. If Lagos was persuaded to leave the cult in the judge, the jury, the executioner, should have enough evidence to convict him and expel him from Sparta. Soon this conversation will end, and the scene between Mirrin and the player will begin in their family home. After a brief reflection on the past, Brasidas will go in and mention Pilos is under attack and Deimos is there. Choose the option that will please you with regard to Deimos, and the mission will end. Bloody Feast is one of the main quests in Assassin's Creed Odyssey.
